The one bit of advice my father gave me that really shaped who I am today was delivered in two separate forms:

1. Always punch above your weight.
2. If you're not the worst musician in the band, go find a better band.

In other words, put yourself into situations where you need to get better than you are if you want to survive. You keep doing that, and you'll build awesome adaptability and learning skills.

I don't always succeed in this, but the rewards are worth the occasional "learning experience."
